POLICY:

Plagiarism– The act of claiming someone else's ideas, thoughts, or work as one's own.

Consequences:

- Redoing the assignment/test
- Redoing a section of the assignment
- Completing an alternative assignment/test
- Assigning a zero

Post-Secondary

POLICY

Plagiarism includes:

- Direct Plagiarism – Using lengthy passages or complete phrases without giving due acknowledgment to the original source.
- Mosaic Plagiarism – Incorporating without giving due credit borrowed words, phrases, or ideas into your original writing.
- Improper Paraphrasing or Summarizing – Rephrasing an author's ideas without giving due credit to the creator.

Consequences: Allegations of plagiarism are taken very seriously by the university. If found guilty of plagiarism, students could receive punishments like suspension or expulsion.

The following statement demonstrates how seriously academic dishonesty, including plagiarism, is viewed within the academic community:

Whether it is referred to as intellectual dishonesty or fraud, there can be no greater insult to the integrity of an academic institution or of the academic community than dishonesty. Therefore, one can understand the urge to find it and treat it with the disapproval it merits when it is believed to exist. Krever, J. in Hajee v. York University, 11 OAC 72, 1985

Consequences: a warning; finishing a task on academic honesty; finishing a make-up task, test, or exam; or redoing and resubmitting a task, all of which will result in a lower grade; reduction in assessment grade, drop in course grade, failure in course;

Workplace

Marie-Louise Gumuchian

Marie-Louise Gumuchian, a news editor, was fired by CNN for continuous plagiarism. Ms. Gumuchian is found to have around 50 stories containing plagiarized work. CNN claims that it has deleted full pieces of Gumuchian's writing off its website in some circumstances and removed the copied material from those writings.
